June 13, 2013 - Election update: Wealthy Los Angeles landlord pulls out from regime elections.

FDI has learned that Frank Rahban, a wealthy real estate investor in Los Angeles, is the owner of the building the regime planned to use tomorrow in Santa Monica to hold its “election” show, located at 401 San Vicente Blvd.

Mr. Rahban encountered public notoriety in 2009 when anti-billboard activists protested in front of his Brentwood home because he had used one of his properties to host a 6-storey billboard. He owns the Santa Monica property through a family trust with his wife and son.

California commercial records show that he operates Overland Investment Company on W. Pico Blvd, and is a partner or investor in at least five other real estate partnerships.

After receiving a torrent of calls from angry Iranian-Americans on Thursday, Mr. Rahban apparently canceled the rental agreement for his property and the Iranian Interests Section has removed the address from the list of active polling stations on its website.

Thanks to all who called!
